Why Elders Are Abused

- Physical abuse often takes place in families with a history of violence, including child abuse and spouse abuse, or a history of drug abuse or mental illness, or a combination of these. In some cases, elder physical abuse is retaliation for earlier child abuse.
- Financial abuse usually occurs within situations where the elder is no longer able to protect his or her financial interests and is exploited by an unscrupulous relative or other caregiver who sees an opportunity to take advantage of the elder's vulnerability. Financial abuse is often connected with substance abuse and the need to support an abuser's drug habits.

- Neglect often occurs in situations where the caregiver is unaware of the full needs of the elder, or too stressed out or exhausted to meet those needs. In some cases, the caregiver could do better but simply chooses not to take sufficient responsibility for the elder's care.
- Psychological abuse is sometimes the result of stress, but is often used in combination with other types of abuse to control the behavior of an elder.

Reporting abuse or neglect of an elder or dependent adult in Los Angeles County can be confusing since several agencies have jurisdiction:

Outside of a nursing home or residential care facility:

Report to Adult Protective Services and/or to local police.

In a Nursing Home:

Report to the Ombudsman and/or to local police.

The licensing agency is the Los Angeles County Department of Health Services, Health Facilities Division who also investigates. The fact that a violation or citation was issued becomes part of the public record of the facility. You can check this record on the Internet.

In a Residential Care facility:

Report to the Ombudsman and/or to local police.

The licensing agency is the Department of Social Services, Community Care Licensing who also investigates. The fact that a violation or citation was issued becomes part of the public record of the facility.
